

What to say as we head into April?

For the first time we're actually "going proper". We have a proper business bank account. We have papers on file with the Ohio Secretary of State. After the nightmare that happened at the start of 2019 we are moving beyond pro bono work to attempting minimal commercial viability.

On the projects list we have coming up a short film project. A story treatment was completed for what is going to be a short documentary. A news story took place in a quiet part of our planet earlier this year that needs to be told more loudly. Keeping a free and open Internet is a great aspiration but if an island nation can be cut off from it due to an anchor being dragged there is a problem.

While we previously have done radio ad production work that was on a pro bono basis supporting a major event taking place at an Ashtabula County Metroparks Board location. Campaign season is coming up for the Ohio municipal election cycle. We are available to write and produce ads for candidates and levy committees that are looking to save money in their paid placements.

Although we have produced podcasts for others we have not done any standalone work. This is under reconsideration. We certainly look at brokered airtime opportunities on shortwave as valuable adjuncts to Internet-based distribution and know that WBCQ and WRMI remain very viable platforms for use.

Quite a bit has changed since the first production projects back in 1998. The world has changed quite a bit. The value of good production quality remains, though. That's what we offer.

Take the time and start a conversation with us.
